

Wind turbine certification poses some unique challenges in the energy sector. We have to balance the need for improved efficiency with the need for high reliability and reduced cost. The limitations inherent in testing make computer analysis a requirement, and the high degree of component coupling makes a systems-oriented approach an attractive option. Today, we'll discuss just such an option using MSC Adams for simulating both rigid and flexible components in a wind turbine.